

7521104344.txt

Telecommunication companies post absolutely enormous profits each quarter, they pay their leadership very well, and are at no risk of bankruptcy. Their claim is that they need to charge more to support growing demand. I pay $1400 a year for media services, along with everybody in my city. If they need to invest it in their backbone infrastructure, the answer isn't to charge more, it is to rebudget their spending based on new priorities.