the FCC should reclassify broadband internet as a telecommunications (or "Common carrier") service to keep net Neutrality. I've designed and published a few webpages of my own. I put my money, and time, into the hosting and domain purchase. If my webpages received enough traffic, I would not expect to pay more for people accessing my content because I have no control over who visits my page. I'm not PAYING millions of people to access my webpage and give me views/money, so paying a corporation due to my high traffic volume should not be a thing.
