A free internet has generated trillions of dollars for the U.S. economy in a short span of 20 years and selectively throttling traffic threatens that boom. The telecom companies should be reclassified under title II. They bring little value and they have unfair local monopolies that limit customer choices. This is especially true in New York City with Time Warner Cable. They should have no say in how users access content through their cables just as phone companies can't limit your calls. The telecom companies, by insisting to throttle traffic, have forced the hand of the FCC and the people. They have sown their own demise by expediting their reclassification as common carriers.

You have enormous power over the future of our economy and countless unborn American enterprises. Do not harm our future by taking the easy road. Courage to stand up to vested interests is desperately needed.
