I just want to state that I believe that internet neutrality is vital to free speech in the United States. We need to keep a level playing field for freedom of expression and for innovation. I am certain that giving this up would be a burden to those who want their voice heard, their vision shared, their business to grow, and to all of the citizens of this country who rely on this being a truly level playing field. In an age where money in politics have come under so much pressure and when so many of us feel that our government has stopped representing us and started representing the highest bidder, protecting the right of every citizen to browse, post, create, and comment wherever they want and know that they can reach their virtual destinations uninterrupted by the whims of corporate giants would help reassure the people that the group's created to ensure that our rights were protected still work. Failure to protect internet neutrality is the failure of the FCC to do it's job.
