"Ensuring that every American has access to open and robust high-speed Internet service" -- your stated (pretend?) goal is completely defeated by eliminating net neutrality in favor of allowing Google or Verizon or any other giant multinational mega corporation to usurp high-speed service and slow down everyone else, or block them completely.

It is my unproven belief that Google is already interfering with other smaller search engines, which I use instead of Google 99.5% of the time. (I love Google but I do not appreciate its lack of privacy or megacorp tactics.)

I'm also pretty sure Comcast or someone else prevented me from streaming Netflix via DirecTV for several weeks after the "deal" between Comcast and Netflix. I was about ready to cancel Netflix completely when streaming came back. But I have heard my cost is going up. Would that be to pay for that?

How is ANY of this type of behavior "ensuring" or "facilitating" or doing anything but "preventing, prohibiting, stopping" our/my access to the internet or my paid-for internet services?

NET NEUTRALITY IS IMPORTANT. If the current head of the FCC is incapable or otherwise incompetent to fulfill the mission of a free and open internet for ALL then he should be replaced immediately. He certainly seems to be doing everything in his power to sell off to the highest bidder.

Please: Keep your grubby congressional / industrial / federal / lobbyist / corporate hands off the world's internet! With gratitude to the military, the People now require that the web remain free, open and accessible to all without paying tolls.
