I recently heard on Moyers and Co that the FCC can preserve net neutrality by declaring the Internet as a municipal service. It was also made crystal clear that corporate lobbying interests are well represented by the people in charge of the FCC. The former head of the FCC and current person officially representing corporate interests of ISP's said that, to put the Internet under the jurisdiction of the FCC would be like declaring WWII. Well, if you declare that the Internet is a service, I'm likely to believe that you are on my side. Please stand up for the masses, declare that the Internet is a service, and regulate it.
