The FCC needs to reclassify broadband as 'telecommunications' under Title II of the Communications Act, designating internet service providers as "common carriers", as that is exactly what they are in today's day and age. Trying to appease corporate desires by setting up some "pay-to-play" system is ridiculous and completely against any sense of net neutrality no matter how FCC Chairman Wheeler tries to spin it.

I urge you to do the right thing. Do not bow to corporate desires. Do not bow to profit over anything and everything else. Do what is best for continued innovation and free communication across the internet. Reclassify and start regulating broadband as it should be regulated, promoting equal transmission without any restriction.
