Converting 40 year-old cable wires to carry our internet, that was created in an open-source environment by individuals and non-profit standards organizations, does not give a cable company the right to censor information. End of story. As the internet is used more, those companies can adapt or die. Corporations worming around to use the government against the people it was created to serve is really the most despicable result of our plutocracy. These corporations are lucky that the people allow their highway robbery to exist. The only thing keeping me from suggesting that corporations shouldn't even be allowed to profit from controlling internet access is the gross betrayal of our constitutional rights by the government in this area.
