I believe broadband Internet should be classified as a common carrier telecommunications service. Internet Service Providers should not have total control of the flow of information on the Internet, and I believe access should be treated as any other utility. We cannot allow private corporations to stifle innovation and competition, or to tell citizens what information they do and do not have the right to produce and consume. This is critically important, not just for the U.S., but for people all over the world who have benefitted from or contributed to America's role in developing, maintaining and improving the Internet.
