The internet should be classified as a telecommunications service. It is in the best interest of the people that data not receive preferential treatment. If an oligopoly (being large service providers) holds the reigns, they will certainly use it to bleed the people dry. With them able to drive out newer, and possibly more beneficial competition they alone can set prices for sub-par services and crush upstarts who would otherwise offer fair alternatives for isolated regions. All data uses the same space. A bit is a bit and a byte is a byte. If the oligopoly truly wants to provide better services they'll build more 'piping' to better facilitate the flow of information, not remove the 'piping' that flows to other services (review the Comcast/Netflix debacle)

Please vote in the interest of the people, not those that wish to harm the free flow of information. Voting to strip net neutrality will garner the distrust of the people and cement the ideas that the FCC which has been fair, as a group that sold their power/services to those with great wealth. Don't do it!
