Don't let the ISPs strangle the internet to a halt. Don't let tricky words like "fast lane" make you think it is a benefit. This isn't an argument over whether the internet providers should be allowed to charge for fast lanes. This is an argument over whether they should be allowed to institute tolls for specific services. I am already paying for a service and an internet speed. I am already paying for a site like netflix or amazon or any other site. I should not have to pay extra to get my rated speeds for a specific service. If ISPs need to be reclassified to make sure that they do not screw over the average user then that is something that must be done. Do not strangle the innovation that the internet offers because that is our future and short-sighted profit isn't going to benefit anybody but the few at the top.
