If the U.S. truly is a democracy then net neutrality is a cornerstone to a, "for the people by the people", infrastructure. It can not be replaced by a set of laws that put faceless corporations as the end all be all dictators of a free and open system of learning and creativity like the internet a system that is ingested by the every-man, We should not allow and cannot allow it to. If it weren't for the open internet we have today so many large companies that exist now would have never had a chance to grow and flourish. I believe in net neutrality because I think freedom is essential to the human social structure.
