Net neutrality means simply that all like Internet content must be treated alike and move at the same speed over the network. The owners of the Internet's wires cannot discriminate. This is the simple but brilliant "end-to-end" design of the Internet that has made it such a powerful force for economic and social good.

---Lawrence Lessig & Robert W. McChesney:

I believe net neutrality is an extension of free speech. It extends our voice, represented by the data of our artistic, political, social, and technical digital representations. Net neutrality prevents censorship, either complete or through harassment by slowing down transmission. It is time to classify broadband providers as telecommunication providers so that we can preserve equality of expression. Controlling free speech is not an acceptable business model.

We want a free and open internet. Free from corporate control and free from corporate corruption. No slow lanes, no fast lanes. No preferential treatment at all from either side
