

7521111494.txt

I believe that slowing down internet speed then charging to have "faster" internet when in reality you're paying for what you had before is just not right. It is not in the interest of the economy either. It allows the service provider to effectively snuff out competition by slowing down websites and traffic, and competition is the backbone of economic growth.