The internet is the present and future.

With so much of our economy running on the internet, a huge portion of start-ups are based on the internet. It's one of the last places to get a fair try at business, which means competition for the larger, entrenched companies, which is good for the economy.

Also, until we fix the MANY problems with our education system, the internet is one of the few places for children to get a more rounded education in a way that works for them.

This is why internet service should be classified as a title II common carrier telecommunications service.
