Working in the tech industry, it's become abundantly clear to me that internet access should be treated as a utility to preserve the open marketplace that has proven vital in revitalizing the American economy. Giving the service providers the ability to basically make or break a business within the virtual marketplace according to their own rules and without oversight will kill many small businesses JUST as surely as enforcing a tax - only without any communal benefits.

Please keep the internet neutral - it should be treated as a utility and regulated as such.
