It concerns me as a common citizen that my opinions, and often those around, are dismissed in favor of industries and companies. In particular, the concerns over net neutrality and classification of ISPs as common carriers. I believe we as a people will regret the decisions of those in power should the FCC continue to ignore our voices in favor of these industries. I hope the FCC would champion the ideas of net neutrality, and if necessary, reclassify Isp's as common carriers to carry out this goal. The internet, as an integral piece of world infrastructure, deserves to be open to all, rather than sold to the public / web developers at the discretion of companies / ISPs that control these data conduits. It strikes me as a sad state of affairs that in the USA we must fight for such basic rights from a government entity that should have the peoples best interest in mind, and not multi-billion dollar conglomerate companies such as Comcast and Time Warner.
