

7521113563.txt

ISPs should be considered common carriers. In many places there is not a choice of ISPs nor are the lines used by different companies. So being that only one company uses the lines to my house/town/neighborhood, then they should be considered common carriers as if they deny me service, my choices are essentially none even with 2 choices(cable vs DSL), your options are just as limited. The internet is the new mail/phone system.