

7521113571.txt

In many senses, the Internet is a reflection of American society. Those who succeed are those with a good idea and the ability to implement said idea. However, this is only possible because EVERYONE has an equal opportunity to succeed - that is, no individual or firm is discriminated against in the transmission of data by the Internet itself. And end to net neutrality would bring about an end to this equality of opportunity, as ISPs would be able to, for example, restrict traffic of Netflix in order to promote their own cable TV service. This not only inherently inhibits competition, it laughs at the idea of a free market. In order to prevent such a situation from arising, I request that broadband internet be reclassified as a title II common carrier telecommunications service.