

7521113950.txt

Access to the internet is access to information, and therefore any compromise to net neutrality directly equates denying people fair and unbiased access to information. Future generations will look upon this time with shame and bewilderment that such a basic and obvious concept was ever debated, much as the present civilized world regards women's suffrage and racial equality debates from the past.

Preserve net neutrality.