The internet's design has allowed any and all manner of thoughts and ideas to travel great distances in the increasingly fastest way we can process information. We as users of this great tool are not subjugated to the whims of competing companies who also use this tool, and we should never have to. The internet is for anyone and everyone who can access it, and where it to be subjected to a corporate control the entire system of programming and idea sharing would be purely for business and not as the vast library of information that it is. We as users choose to maintain net neutrality and refuse to see it restricted.
