A free and open internet is essential to the flow of information and economic competition. I urge you to classify Internet Service as a title II common carrier telecommunications service. ISPs should not be able to discriminate between types of data or sources of data on the internet. Doing so allows them to offer their antiquated services at a premium. Additionally cable companies such as Comcast and Time Warner already practice unfair policies, limiting services to one cable/isp provider for customers living in apartments, with exclusivity contracts.
