I heard you are requesting comments on the classification of the internet. Just to throw my 2 cents in as a non-expert citizen, I think that the internet should be classified as a telecommunications or "common carrier" service.

I have heard some very convincing arguments on how the alternative could lead to providers, ex. comcast, exploiting the situation for massive profits by restricting and controlling access to certain sites. Like giving bandwidth priority to customers who had to pay a premium for better access to certain sites, or slowing down the connections to small businesses and small sites or forums without large budgets in preference to certain content providers such as netflix or google who pay the provider for preferential treatment, priority etc. If that situation were allowed to develop it seems to me that the internet would become an even more unlevel playing field preferring big corporations to small businesses and opinion bloggers. Which would be a crying shame.
