Please reclassify broadband internet as a telecommunications (or "Common carrier") service. Right now broadband is regulated like TV or radio, which doesn't make sense.

I'm not an expert, and I know there are more informed individuals on both sides of this argument than I am. However, I can say this: in my experience, telecom services don't owe the American people anything and have no incentive NOT to take advantage of monopolies. In my area we have TWO internet providers: Comcast and AT&T. We've had major issues with both companies, but since the choices are so limited and so much of commerce is dependent on internet access, we are essentially forced to choose between the two. This is one step away from a monopoly. This is not a free market system thriving in an atmosphere of competition.

I believe it is not up to the government, but the people within the government, to do what is best for the people of the United States. I ask that the members of the FCC take a hard look at how Telecoms have operated in the past, and the present, when considering whether they can be trusted with such a core resource of the American People.
