Enabling ISPs with the freedom dictate what traffic they feel is appropriate is a fundamental change to an infrastructure that underpins our modern economy. With the state of monopoly already enjoyed by these organizations, it is far too much power placed in the hands of too few who have demonstrated an adversity towards competition in this space, and continue to move to further consolidation, not diversification. Owners of the physical pipe should not be the same entities who provide the service of connection across the pipe. Make the pipe operators common carriers, and allow us to have more options in who we use as our ISP across this infrastructure.
