

7521115499.txt

While I can see the benefits of the argument made by ISPs that they could implement faster speeds to websites that can pay for a faster connection, I do not trust that they would do this without harming those who can not pay. ISPs already have an abysmal history of making the minimal amount of improvements to infrastructure while simultaneously charging their customers exponentially more.