The Internet is far too important to be allowed to be subject to the vagaries of what future FCC chairs might or might not do. While I am certain that Mr. Wheeler means what he says about protecting network neutrality, future directors might not, and the current draft as worded puts the future of network neutrality in their hands.

What will fix this problem is reclassifying broadband Internet service as a Title II common carrier - now and forever. Please, reclassify broadband in this way to preserve both the freedom of expression and commercial benefits of the Internet for everyone.
