

7521117893.txt

Broadband Internet connectivity in all forms should be reclassified as telecommunications or "common carrier". I am against Internet providers having the power to control access speeds arbitrarily against the interests of the public which provide payment and running costs for this service. If Internet connectivity could ever be considered a public utility, I would support that above it being primarily offered as a private resource.