It has become time to classify Internet Service Providers as Title II Common Carriers. The possibilities for abuse are just too great otherwise, and in fact already occurring. Failure to do so will cripple the future economic well being of the United States, stifle innovation, and limit the freedom of consumers to choose the content they desire. Abuse of monopoly position is never in the good interest of the consumer, and this is obviously with today's internet market. Few users have choices, leaving the bulk at the mercy of companies with no recourse of voting with their wallets. Years of franchising have ensured this. In turn, monopolistic companies are leveraging their monopoly to advance their own products above competitors, the very definition of abuse of monopoly. Without net neutrality, they will continue to do so. Net neutrality must be step one, with step two being an aggressive review by the USDOJ for abusive use of monopoly position.
