Let us cut to the chase: Internet Providers are common carriers in every way. They simply move content from one place to another, just like shipping companies, airlines, railroads, or, in the case of utilities, like electric and gas companies. The fact that some ISP's also create their own content should not give them the right to act as a gatekeeper, filtering and slowing content which they didn't create. It is time for this commission to do right by the average American internet consumer, and reclassify Internet Service Providers as "Common Carriers." Net neutrality is a good thing for consumers. Please make it happen!
