Please, do not allow cable companies dictate the speed their customers receive content on the internet. Classify internet service as a communications service and that companies providing the service should not make consumers pay extra to be able to receive content. Nor should cable companies be able to charge other companies fees for their customers to be able to use their service.

This is like a TV manufacture being able to charge the cable companies fee's because the technology that it takes to improve the TV's the cable customers use, cost the TV manufacturer millions in research and development. Keep the net neutral.
