Why shouldn't broadband Internet access be considered a telecommunications service? Don't allow the major ISP's to stifle innovation by demanding extra fees for faster access. It's ridiculous that you're even considering changing the rules to benefit the major broadband carriers. We're a broadband backwater already and being charged more for that slow access when compared to the rest of the industrialized world so your solution is to allow the broadband companies to throttle whatever services they like at will? Absurd!
