

7521118799.txt

While I appreciate the money involved in creating a network, I also think that double dipping is flat wrong. They receive plenty of money from users on a regular basis. Any money received from content providers would be icing on the cake for most ISPs anyway. If the ISPs were operating at a loss, I would see a need for double dipping. However, until they post a loss of profits, Net neutrality should be preserved in whatever manner possible.