

7521119733.txt

Maintaining a neutral internet policy is vital to protecting public choice in the content they consume on the internet. This choice is vital to the free exchange of ideas and a free and efficient market place.

The FCC should NOT allow people or companies to buy preferential access to the internet. Everyone should have equal access to the internet, just as everyone has equal access to public highways. Indeed, the internet should become a public utility.