The internet is working now. It may not be perfect, but it has had a long history of being able to manage itself without the involvement of governmental or other regulatory agencies.

Stop trying to fix it. In fact, just don't get involved. Stop listening to the lobbyists and their money. It is precisely these entities that have caused everything else the government has touched to fall into ruin.

As both a network operator and a consumer, I see nothing the FCC can do to improve my experience. In fact, the removal of bulk deals in MDUs to "foster competition for the small providers" has actually done the opposite.

Stop breaking the internet. Stay out of it.
