

7521120883.txt

I request that net neutrality be retained in its present form.

Should the changes sought by major internet service providers, e.g. Verizon, be adopted, the Internet will cease being an open means of communication, but rather one which can be corrupted by profit-driven entities.

The possibility that the speed to which private Internet users are accustomed will be reduced becomes more of a likelihood should their subscribed services, e.g. Amazon Prime, not pay increased fees.

Or, if their subscribed services pay the increased fees their subscribers will be forced to shoulder the cost.
pay these fees my subscription costs will arise.

The American public financially underwrote development of the Internet. Any reduction of the benefit it receives resulting from its investment solely to benefit corporate fiscal interests would be an abdication of regulatory responsibility.