Broadband internet should be reclassified as a Common carrier service. Broadband internet was created net neutral and should remain that way. I already pay money to the providers for X amount of broadband access as does the services I use, such as Netflix. Why should my provider charge the service provider or myself more money to prioritize that service for me? There is a cost associated with providing me and my service broadband internet service, that cost is included in the fee's we pay to the provider's already. This seems like simple greed and abuse of political lobbying.

Sincerely,

Richard Yoes
