

7521121071.txt

The Internet has become a necessity in the lives of people living in the United States. Those who choose to not use the Internet put themselves at a huge disadvantage when it comes to higher education, looking for work, applying for jobs, and staying in touch with the world abroad. Allowing one company to completely control this resource will result in extreme negative consequences to the consumers. It is imperative that ISP's become classified as common carriers.