It is well past time for Internet Service Providers to be classified as Common Carriers.

Virtually all communication is being converted to IP Packets and transferred over the internet as it is, this includes voice, video, email, and wire transfers. When the internet has replaced so many previous communications carriers, how has it NOT become THE common carrier, and the Internet Service Providers with it?

Refusal to classify ISP's as Common Carriers is denial of reality. It is time to rectify this.
