If the FCC gives up on network neutrality this will only make the services on the Internet more expensive for everybody. I already pay my ISP and the content provider pays their ISP. Now my ISP wants some money from the content providers too. No Thank You! This is just a scam to press out some more money from the content providers. In the end I and all the other consumers have to pay for all this extra that brings no value to the table. I already pay for fast Internet and if my ISP can not provide this the open market will take care of this. Look Netflix just raised the price after paying money to Verizon, this is already the first sign.
