Internet providers should be counted as and have to follow the rules as common carriers. To have them slow down websites and force them to pay will give them the power to later on kill competition. In my area Comcast virtually has a monopoly. All other services are slow and sluggish and Comcast is just barely decent. Internet providers like Comcast are not legally responsible for what I see, yet they can slow down Netflix which would, by extension, give them power to prefer one site over the other and block sites seem unfair. The internet is a way information is spread, and to let that power go towards the most meddling middle man in existence would be a shame and the start of what I believe to be the next Rockefeller.
