The internet used to be a fun place to visit, and held the door open to so many possibilities. Unfortunately, not only was the internet abused, so was the trust that consumers place in the internet. Its unfortunate. I use and trust the internet less now.

If you make the rule changes, I will continue to roll back my internet involvement even further as, already, access to content, speeds and frankly, interruptions of service, unknown origin call and service drops, total unreliability as to security for intellectual property, have eroded the benefits of the internet.

I hope the Commission will see that net neutrality - and REAL neutrality - no games, no corruption, no filing complaints afterwards - is the only future ahead for the internet - before its utility is replaced and the economic engine that has become a barely working generator is lost.
