

7521124800.txt

I urge to you to consider the potential harm of allowing discriminatory access to a service listed as a basic human right. Not only is there already the threat of near monopolistic competition and incredibly high barriers of entry in the isp market, but also abandoning core net neutrality principals but may also significantly increase the barriers to entry for content providers. A large and growing percentage of our economy originates from the online marketplace and an act such as this would in turn hinder potential growth of existing content providers and startups alike.

Cooper odell