Dear FCC,

I'm Em Hurford and I live in Newburgh, IN.

Net neutrality, the principle that Internet service providers (ISPs) should treat all data that travels over their networks equally, is important to me because without it ISPs could have too much power to determine my Internet experience by providing better access to some services but not others.

A pay-?to-play Internet worries me because ISPs could act as the gatekeepers to their subscribers.

The internet is important to me because I am primarily housebound at the moment, and the internet is my window to the world. Being able to access the broad, rich tapestry of a free internet is one of the things that keeps me sane and lets me feel as though I'm still a member of the human race. The idea that this tapestry might be made threadbare, or worse, have its richness restricted to only those who can afford it, terrifies me. Please don't let this happen. Keep the internet neutral.
