Dear FCC,

I'm Alan Dayley and I live in Gilbert, AZ.

Net neutrality, the principle that Internet service providers (ISPs) should treat all data that travels over their networks equally, is important to me because without it the diversity of information and services available to me will be limited.

A pay-to-play Internet worries me because new, innovative services that can't afford expensive fees for better service will be less likely to succeed.

Open, freely available infrastructure is a strong driver of economic progress. The Internet is as valuable as it is now mostly because of the level playing field provided by Net Neutrality.
