Dear FCC,

I'm Steve Barker and I live in St. George, UT.

Net neutrality, the principle that Internet service providers (ISPs) should treat all data that travels over their networks equally, is important to me because without it users may have fewer options and a less diverse Internet.

A pay-to-play Internet worries me because new, innovative services that can't afford expensive fees for better service will be less likely to succeed.

The Internet is important to me because, as a business, I need to know that there will not be barriers to entry for the new ideas and services that I hope to bring to the marketplace. If ISP subscribers have an easier time loading websites of existing companies than my new innovative product, there's no way that I will be able to compete or succeed. Also, what new Internet based technology will I not get to see/use if ISP's get to pick winners and losers. I really don't expect you to care or do anything but what you think will help ISP corporations, not the people. All you care about is you and the corporations that pay you to do their bidding. What the people want is of no consequence and that is sad for a country that's supposed to be about "We the people".
