I will not support an internet that follows these new ruleings. To allow a comapy to charge a competitor more for a basic necessity in todays world is outlandish and wrong. By charging those companys more they have to charge the consumers more and then the price goes up. The only internet i will support is one where all trafic is treated equaly.

Moreover something else should be a far bigger concern than this issue. The infrastructure in the us for internet is trash and needs many upgrades and advancements. Along woth that how about fixing thr issue that the IPC's are creating by flooding their own lines with fake traffic causing an overload and then saying that it is overloaded because of users and not because of their own internal meddling. If their bandwidth for normal usage is beyond capasity how on earth are they going to give compays a fast lane using that same infrastructure.

Essencialy they are saying that they will cut capacity of the allready overloaded lanes and thrn charge companys more to use these "new" fast lanes.

I will not be supporting that in any way and i dont think many others would ei ther.
