Dear FCC,

I'm Richard A. Kronick and I live in Charleston, SC.

Net neutrality, the principle that Internet service providers (ISPs) should treat all data that travels over their networks equally, is important to me because without it ISPs could have too much power to determine my Internet experience by providing better access to some services but not others.

A pay-to-play Internet worries me because ISPs could act as the gatekeepers to their subscribers.

I oppose rules that will stifle Internet innovation and creativity. To allow certain interests priority on fast internet access for a fee will decrease the small start-ups that have been the backbone of the internet. My ability to use the internet for commercial purposes by throttling my speeds will be detrimental to the economy considering how many of us are pursuing the same goals. Many of the companies that can afford to pay for speed could care less about other's desire for a level playing field.
