

7521128367.txt

As a Software Engineer I can say with confidence that the future of the Internet depends on Net Neutrality, without of which ONLY the ISP's benefit.

As consumers we already use services like Netflix at speeds below what we were promised when we signed up for Internet service. We get by though, because the freedom for all services to use the same Internet is more important to society and our future then how long it takes for a cartoon to load on my television.

The Internet has been one of the most successful and influential inventions to our modern society and world. If we reflect on what the Internet is and how it's come to be, we would see that the Internet's inherit fairness is the glue holding the web together.

The Internet has created a generation of people that will fight for the philosophy it currently abides by. Freedom and fairness for the consumption of information on the Internet is a driving force behind the greatest minds of the information age.

I can assure you that getting rid of Net Neutrality will lead to a future where the Internet as we know and love will cease to exist. However, never underestimate the brilliance of the programmers and engineers on the Internet. If YOU break the Internet, there will be another. Let's skip that for now and keep Net Neutrality.