As a consumer of media and broadband services as well as a voting taxpayer, I strongly urge against the passage of this bill in its current form. The principles of Net Neutrality and thus consumers are best served by a completely open internet without the inclusion of so-called paid fast lanes. I already pay for access to broadband services and should not have hidden additional costs in the form of per-vendor 'fees'.

The best for everyone would be to consider internet providers Common Carriers and insist that they provide bandwidth as advertised and without any content restrictions or limitations.
